Boston, August 5, 2020 – API hacking does not require the advanced capabilities of a nation-state; even relatively inexperienced attackers can use basic tools to discover and exploit API traffic to perform credential stuffing attacks, exfiltrate databases, change account values, or conduct denial of service attacks on critical applications. This report identifies seven core competencies essential to security API development, deployment, and management, and provides recommendations for FIs, fintech companies, and insurtech companies to improve their API security methods.

Q. Do you inventory APIs?
